Hauptman & Hauptman Interviewed On CareOne Living Inaugural Podcast

- Hauptman & Hauptman, guiding families through life's transitions –

Livingston, NJ – Yale S. Hauptman, Founding Partner and Laurie A. Hauptman, Partner, Hauptman & Hauptman, P.C., were recently guests on CareOne's Inaugural Living Podcast Series. The podcast was created to help, inform and educate the community on issues related to all aspects of senior living.

Hosted by CareOne Chief Strategy Officer, Tim Hodges, the lively discussion revolved around how to approach the preplanning process and what to expect along the way. They also touched upon conversations adult children should begin to have with their parents, guardianships, power of attorneys, why IRA's are not joint assets, why adult children need to be on the same team, and a multitude of other necessary matters.

According to Yale, "Nobody wants to think about needing care until it happens but if you can stay ahead of the curve, you're in a better position." Laurie agrees, "It's definitely a role reversal to have the kids inquiring about finances and health issues but we find that the dialogue still needs to happen although it is a difficult one."

CareOne offers an uncompromising continuum of care. Their commitment to excellence is displayed through a variety of superior programs and services. From their clinical expertise in sub-acute care to their experience and well-earned reputation as leaders in assisted living services, they go above and beyond to ensure well-being, comfort and outcome-oriented patient care.

Yale S. Hauptman, founding partner, Hauptman & Hauptman, PC., is licensed both in New Jersey and New York. His practice is focused on elder, estate, and special needs law. He has personally helped thousands of families plan for the complicated and emotional journey through the long-term care process. Yale writes and speaks extensively on elder, estate and special needs law topics, has been featured in both local and national media and has been quoted in print and digital media outlets. Additionally, Yale presents elder law topics to legal, financial, insurance and health care professional organizations as well as to the general public. He is also a published author of an eldercare book entitled, "Be Nice To Me-I Pick Your Nursing Home." Yale teamed up with his partner and wife, Laurie A. Hauptman, Esq., and nationally acclaimed speaker and financial advisor, Don Quante, for his book, "Don't Go Broke in a Nursing Home", a consumer's real-life hands-on guide to long-term care, including Medicaid eligibility, Veterans benefits, and new ways to "self-fund" your care without going broke. Laurie A. Hauptman is a partner at Hauptman & Hauptman, PC. She is a New Jersey and New York licensed attorney who has concentrated her practice on estate, elder and special needs law for over 20 years. Additionally, Laurie is a Department of Veterans Affairs' accredited attorney for the preparation, presentation and prosecution of claims for veterans benefits. She has been intrinsically involved with helping thousands of families navigate the circuitous and emotional journey through the long-term and special needs process. Laurie was a trial attorney in a litigation firm before joining forces with her husband, Yale. Her courtroom experience is essential to handling the firm's court work, including guardianships, conservatorships and special needs trusts. Civically and community minded, she is a member of the United Way Caregivers Coalition Steering Committee, Co-Chairperson of the Elder and Disability Law Committee of the Essex County Bar Association and a frequent lecturer on estate, special needs and elder law planning topics.
